MARGINAL COLUMN BY MEIR MINDLIN

THE three-week-old London bus strike is reminiscent in many ways of the Arab strike last year, and raises the question of the point and efficacy of such strikes in inflation-threatened welfare-state societies. There seems to be no simple way of squaring the vicious circle, if there is indeed any way at all.

LONDON busmen earn a £1 basic wage of about £30 a month (or the Israeli equivalent multiplied by five) and their wage claims had been submitted to an arbitration board. This board decided on an increase of roughly IL 2,120 per week, but only for the central busmen, and not for those who work on routes to the more distant suburbs; the busmen refused to accept this arrangement, which they say was designed to split them and west on strike. The Government claims that to accede to the strikers' wish would be wrong on principle because it would set a precedent for ignoring the findings of arbitration boards when they are displeasing, and says that the money isn't available anyway. With no pretensions having any inside information, one may surmise that there is considerable truth in the allegations of both sides.

THE big red double-decker buses have vanished from the streets of London, but unfortunately for the busmen, life has hardly been disrupted. This is the case chiefly because the underground drivers are still functioning (the underground workers belonging to the Railwaymen's Union) and though it is heavily overloaded during the rush hours, people are getting to work and back. The railwaymen are now asking for a wage increase too, but if their negotiations break down and they strike, it will still probably be too late to help the busmen.

THE situation would not have been very different if there had been a Labour government in power. Assuming that the unions would not have succeeded in using their influence to get the raise, their charges and criticisms would perhaps have been less acrimonious, but the conflict is a real one, and the question is how big a slice of the national cake a particular group is to get, and by what standards one determines when and for whom the slicing is done. A government in power that is fighting inflation (as we do) is also fighting the British, and many West European countries are doing so. It is obviously obliged to keep wages as stable as possible, but it is very difficult to explain to workers that wage increases may be illusory since they will be eaten up by rising prices. On the other hand, there are groups of workers, engineers whose incomes should be raised in reasonable proportion to the jump in the cost of living, but how can one expect other workers to restrain their own demands after the granting of a particular award?

WHEN, under these circumstances, strikes do break out, they are generally harmful to the country's economy as a whole, and there are losses around which this is exemplified here by the general feeling that the bus strike is somehow pointless and wasteful, and could and should have been avoided, perhaps would have if both sides had been a bit more flexible and imaginative. One cannot escape the feeling that the strike, when used thus against a nationalized public service, is misguided and obnoxious, and a very ineffectual way of attaining the aims of any of the parties concerned, with the public and the strikers both suffering. That is what the arbitration machinery is there for, but unless it is integrated in a more comprehensive economic scheme, it doesn't seem to work. A wide-awake ministry of labour, in close touch with workers' needs and living conditions, should be able to forestall such blows to the national economy. Or perhaps unions should be given a more direct role — and therefore more direct responsibility — in formulating wage policies.

Senate Probe Into Anti-Nixon Riots

WASHINGTON, Sunday (Reuter). — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has begun an inquiry tomorrow into the reasons for the stormy demonstrations in South America against the U.S. Vice-President, Mr. Richard Nixon. A sweeping Congressional review of U.S. policies in Latin America is expected to result from the Senate inquiry.

Observers believe that the State Department, and possibly the Central Intelligence Agency, will come under heavy fire for their failure to recognize the problems which the Vice-President encountered. Some people hope that the inquiry may lead to a shake-up among U.S. Ambassadors in South America.

Knesset Meets Today After 7-Week Recess

French Gov't Calls Up Gendarme Reserves

PARIS, Sunday (Reuter). — The Government today announced the mobilization of "certain categories" of the gendarmerie reserve, and also relieved M. Barat, the Super-Prefect of Algiers, of his post.

The Knesset will begin its Summer Term this afternoon after a seven-week recess, which was broken for a few hours on April 22, when a special festive session was called to launch the Tenth Anniversary celebrations.

The principal item on the agenda for today is the Bill on the Council for Higher Education, which is to be introduced for its first reading by the Minister of Education and Culture.

The Bill provides for the establishment of a council to deal with all matters pertaining to higher education and research, including coordination between institutions of higher learning and recognition of institutions. However, decisions of the Council are to be subject to a general withdrawal of recognition.

Informed sources said the total number normally on active service in the gendarmerie is about 20,000. Provincial gendarmeries have been deployed to reinforce the Paris police against any disorders. Gendarmes normally carry rifles or sub-machine guns.

The French Government decided to dismiss M. Barat after yesterday's demonstration in Algiers by 100,000 persons who wildly applauded M. Jacques Soustelle when he addressed them soon after his arrival.

Restorer of Republic'

Premier Pflimlin today conferred with his key ministers and political leaders on the Algerian crisis and then reported to the prime minister. He was accompanied by Deputy Premier Guy Mollet.

Strong police forces guard the President's residence and stood by in side streets.

General Guillaume, former Resident-General in Morocco and Chief of Staff of the army forces from 1954 to 1956, was recalled on M. Courtois' hand, to hand in a declaration asking him, "if necessary, to call on the Restorer of the Republic" to maintain a strong and stable Government.

Known here as "The Restorer of the Republic."

Communist and Socialist deputies are maintaining a day and night vigil in the National Assembly as "watch-

Soustelle and Salan Say, 'Algeria Will Save France'

ALGIERS, Sunday (Reuter). — M. Jacques Soustelle and General Raoul Salan, the two key men in the Algerian crisis, suggested today that Algeria would "save France."

M. Soustelle told cheering crowds that the Algerian revolt is not directed against the freedoms of the French Republic, nor against links with France.

General Salan, the Commander-in-Chief in Algeria, said in a short speech, "United together, Frenchmen and French Moslems, we shall live in the day."

Though Salan was calm today than for several days past the situation remained explosive and unresolved. M. Soustelle, who arrived here secretly yesterday on a Swiss chartered plane, insisted that he has come in a private capacity.

As a former Governor-General of Algeria, his prestige is high with the settlers who see him as opposed to a "settler" policy.

Soustelle as Advisor

Army sources said today that M. Soustelle could be considered as a technical and political adviser to Gen. Salan, who remains in contact with the Paris Government.

A spokesman said the whole army in Algeria was behind Gen. Salan. The army wanted a strong Government in France to continue the fight against the insurgents.

One newspaper today reported that M. Soustelle had arranged an ultimatum to M. Pflimlin in Paris, calling on him to resign as Prime Minister. M. Pflimlin refused, according to "Le Soir d'Algier," and reportedly resigned at the insistence of the settlers' organizations. There was no other confirmation of this report. An informed source said the possibility could not be excluded that M. Soustelle came here with the approval of the French Government.

M. Salan accompanied M. Soustelle in two public appearances this morning. M. Soustelle laid a wreath at the War Memorial near Government House. Among those present at this ceremony was M. George Barat, the Algiers Super-Prefect.

M. Soustelle returned to

Sixty-five Dead In Casablanca Air Crash

BRUSSELS, Sunday (Reuter). — Sixty-five persons were killed when a four-engined Belgian D.C. airliner flying from Brussels to the Belgian Congo crashed on landing at Casablanca, North Africa, today. It was one of the worst international air crashes of recent years.

Of the 60 passengers on board, there were only four survivors. Sabena airlines announced. The crew of nine were all killed.

According to reports here, the aircraft approached Casablanca from the east, ran steeply, overshoot the runway, tried to gain height, and caught fire.

Six passengers left the aircraft at Lisbon and six more got on the plane. Eight children were among the passengers who left Brussels last night.

A 30-man commission of enquiry, composed of government, civil aviation and Sabena officials, led by M. Gaston Dieu, Assistant Director General of Sabena, left Brussels by air for Casablanca to-day to carry out an on-the-spot investigation.

The names of the four survivors were given as Edouard Pilaer, of Leopoldville; Edgar Mertens and Jacques Grenier — all Belgians — and Miguel Simonetta, a Swiss citizen living in Madrid.

The Lebanese Prime Minister, Sami e-Solt, had a

Russia: Serious Consequences If West Intervenes in Lebanon

Egypt Said Directing Rebels

Russia yesterday warned the West, in a formal statement issued in Moscow by the official news agency, Tass, that any attempt to use the current internal Lebanese crisis for outside intervention "may have serious consequences not only for the future of the Lebanon state and its independence, but for peace in the Middle East, too."

The statement claimed the U.S. and other Western powers were taking advantage of the Lebanese events to "prepare a new plot in the Near East." It described these actions as "inadmissible."

Embassy staffs of certain Western powers in Beirut said yesterday that British warships taking part in NATO fleet exercises during the coming week would be operating in the Eastern Mediterranean instead of the West, in case it should be necessary to evacuate British nationals from Lebanon.

Ships and aircraft from Britain, France, Italy, Turkey and the U.S. are taking part in the six-day operation to assist in the planning and control of foreign troops which had already started to invade Lebanon.

U.S. airmen had already arrived in the country, and it was they who "launched attacks against the people," he alleged. Taha called on the U.A.R. to fulfill his promise to help Arab cause everywhere.

Saudi Troops To Leave Jordan

Saudi Arabian forces will withdraw from Jordan over the next few days as there is no necessity for their stationing in the country with the imminent announcement of the Arab Union Government. The Old City paper "El Jihad" reported yesterday. A small "token force" will be left in Jordan. It was added.

"Palace" reported that 150 Jordanian tanks had left for Iraq yesterday to transport the first supply of fuel oil to Jordan. Iraqi refineries are to supply Jordan with 15,000 tons of oil a month.

Opera Will Open In Week's Time

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. Sunday.—The Israeli National Opera's first performance is scheduled to take place in the former "Knesset" Cinema in a week's time.

The building, which housed the Knesset nine years ago, is being remodelled to suit the requirements of a theatre. It served as the meeting place of the Ministry of Culture for a time, and until recently it housed the offices of the Income Tax Department.

The walls are painted different shades of blue, and the candelabra which will adorn it next Sunday will be a bright ivory. Ivory and blue will be the dominant colours of the 850 seats. Miss Edna de Philippe, moving spirit of the opera, says: "The curtain of broad lace has been woven by a firm which specializes in export textiles. To hang it, special scaffolding had to be erected on the stage."

A POLICE force, in a small and intimate country like Israel, takes its tone from its leadership.

In Mr. Yosef Nahmias, who has just been appointed the new Inspector General of Police, the guardians of law and order in Israel have a chief whom they can respect and whose lead they will follow with devotion.

Mr. Nahmias is proud to call himself a Jerusalem man, but his impressive public career hitherto, and particularly since the establishment of the State ten years ago, indicates that he has a breadth of vision and understanding of the problems of Israel as a whole. Most recently he had been seconded to the Foreign Ministry where he was winning new laurels. Nevertheless his return to take executive charge of the police force is a sensible appointment for in the years that he served there previously as Deputy Inspector General he had made a significant contribution in the fields of discipline and efficiency.

In a body like the police continuity of control is very important. This is assured since Mr. Nahmias had been so closely associated with the retiring Inspector General, Mr. Yehezkel Sahar, in this work.

To build a liberal, progressive police force appropriate to a modern State was no easy task in the peculiar circumstances in which our police were found at the beginning of statehood. The remnants of the mandatory force suffered from the dispute in which that body had not undeservedly fallen. Moreover 1948 brought a large immigration from Europe and other lands where the police had traditionally been looked upon by Jews as enemies, since they brutally represented the anti-Semitic leanings of the ruling power. Today the Israeli, through the Knesset, makes his own laws; but the measure of respect and obedience such laws command depends largely on the type of police force that exists to enforce them.

Ten years in this very arduous job is more than enough for any one man. Therefore as Mr. Yehezkel Sahar leaves his office he need have no misgivings over his period of service. That the reputation of the police stands as high as it does is due to the general planning and training system that he instituted and in the carrying out of which he was ably assisted by Mr. Nahmias and latterly by Mr. Amos Ben-Gurion.

Mr. Nahmias takes over a fairly fit and efficient force of men; but he also takes over some quite difficult problems. One is that there is a constant and steady drain of personnel after a year or two of service. Training a policeman is not an inexpensive process and the continuous influx of replacements prevents a large contingent of experienced men being built up and this must put a brake upon progress. How far Mr. Nahmias will be able to stand by the main cause of defections from the force — the low rates of pay — is problematical. This is a matter for the Knesset in its budgetary sessions. But the facts will have to be faced. A policeman receives about the same rate of pay as a postman; but his hours are longer and more irregular; his work is more responsible and is accompanied by much discomfort and not a little personal risk.

There are other troubles which have plagued the police force in the past two or three years. Some of these have been caused and were certainly exaggerated by the maligning and slandering of the police by political groups for murky political purposes. But issues raised will have to be faced. These perhaps do fall more closely within the purview of the new Inspector General.

Mr. Nahmias now comes to a difficult post which is a worthy challenge for a man of his talents. There is every confidence that he will meet it adequately and resolutely.

Premier Karamanlis of Greece being cheered by supporters during the recent election campaign.

Communist Gains In Greek Elections

By LESLIE FINER

ATHENS (O.P.N.S.) — THE British Government has every reason to be satisfied with the results of the Greek elections. From the viewpoint of making progress with the Cyprus negotiations, it was essential that the elections did not result in a victory for the Left.

But the irony of the situation is that by this wholly unexpected success, the extreme Left have seized for themselves the advantages of the new election, which, by reinforcing the representation of the two strongest parties, was designed by the former Karamanlis Government to help the Liberals. Now, after polling only 3% per cent more than the Liberals, the Communist-controlled Left becomes the main Opposition party with 78 seats to the Liberals' 36.

There are several reasons for the sudden rise of the Communists: one is an organization with no expense spared. For the first time Communists had candidates all over Greece and their supporters, many of them illiterate, often arrived to vote with the properly marked ballot paper already tucked in their pockets or handbags to avoid mistakes. Another reason is the inevitable tendency as memories of the civil war grow dimmer for Communists to find its natural level in a still impoverished country.

It would be wrong to conclude that all or even most of the 24 per cent were Communist voters following the party line on domestic issues or on missile bases.

The fact that these votes were cast at the expense of the centre Liberal Party rather than the right-wing party of Mr. Karamanlis supports the view that the majority voted with the Communists so because Greece present has no democratic Socialist Party.

The truth of this estimate may soon be tested. One of the first concerns of the new Government will be to consider the legalization of the Communist Party. There is a large section of right-wing opinion which is prepared to accept this. It would probably result in the immediate separation of the extreme Left opposition into its component parts and, if the right men can be found, might lay the foundations for a democratic Socialist Party independent of Communist control.

The sudden reappearance of the Communist giant has given Greeks a jolt. But it must remain in the achievement of a long delayed process towards a more stable and representative party system.

Vote of Thanks

His victory illustrates the artificiality of the political manoeuvres which caused his fall three months ago. It is essentially a vote of thanks from 41 per cent of the people for his domestic policies while he succeeded in getting re-elected.

He has gained a clear majority of 46 over all other parties in a Parliament of 200 seats. In the previous Parliament — where he had an initial majority of only 30 — Mr. Karamanlis was Prime Minister by virtue of his succession to Field Marshal Papagos. Now he emerges as leader in his own right of a strong and united party.

His victory illustrates the artificiality of the political manoeuvres which caused his fall three months ago. It is essentially a vote of thanks from 41 per cent of the people for his domestic policies while he succeeded in getting re-elected.

He has gained a clear majority of 46 over all other parties in a Parliament of 200 seats. In the previous Parliament — where he had an initial majority of only 30 — Mr. Karamanlis was Prime Minister by virtue of his succession to Field Marshal Papagos. Now he emerges as leader in his own right of a strong and united party.

Cautious Words in Moscow

Al Hanushkin (Mapam) writes that while the avoidance of a calculated anti-Israel thrust in the Khrushchev-Nasser statement should not be taken as an indication of any change in Soviet policy, it is clear that Moscow's refusal to promise its unstinted support for Nasser's stand on the 1947 plan stems from the realization that this would not serve the interests of peace in the Middle East and also adversely affect Soviet prestige.

Dawes (Histadrut) writes that if Khrushchev had identified himself with the Arabs' "1947 borders" claim he would be playing his best trump. Nasser is still in Khrushchev's camp and the Arabs will have to come to Moscow again and again — and pay the price. While Moscow's policy has yielded it some handsome results in this area, the opposite is true as far as the rest of the world is concerned.

Hanasse (National Religious), writes that the Russo-Egyptian joint statement bound the two countries together in a somewhat dilapidated appearance.

The new, and apparently planned southern entrance to the northern end of the "Security Road" leads through to a narrow road crowded by a double zig-zag, criss-crossed bottleneck. On late, there have been serious traffic hold-ups and mile-long queues of trapped cars. I hardly believe this ugly, narrow and complicated alley-way is a fitting entrance to Israel's largest city.

There are several reasons for the sudden rise of the Communists: one is an organization with no expense spared. For the first time Communists had candidates all over Greece and their supporters, many of them illiterate, often arrived to vote with the properly marked ballot paper already tucked in their pockets or handbags to avoid mistakes. Another reason is the inevitable tendency as memories of the civil war grow dimmer for Communists to find its natural level in a still impoverished country.

Ha'aretz (non-party) writes that we must go back at least 30 years to find an analogy to the Khrushchev-Nasser set-up. Chiang Kai-Shek and the Communists have been in Nasser's bag before he even concluded his Moscow talks. Lebanon's doughty stand has somewhat scuttled the programme, but the initiative is still with Nasser. Israel is asked to take note.
